Share of Workers Unemployed by Education Level

This data visualization tracks the share of workers unemployed from March through June 2020. Georgetown Center for Education and the Workforce, "Tracking COVID-19 Unemployment and Job Losses,"

Why continue to support higher education during a pandemic? Because college graduates are far more likely to remain employed and continue to contribute to our economy during the pandemic. While unemployment numbers are up for all levels of education, unemployment is consistently lower for those with a bachelor's degree or higher. In June, 7.4% of four-year college graduates were unemployed, the lowest of any education level, while 13.6% of high school graduates were. College graduates are more likely to stay employed and contribute to sustained economic growth.
